cancer. I found that no one was teaching about breast trauma. At Baptist Hospital, women who fell out of bed and hit their breast got cancer. Head trauma and percussion were related, so we needed to be concerned about breast trauma. Injury to the breast could cause cancer. I knew trauma was related to it. I made it mandatory that all women must have a breast examination beforehand."

Although textbooks have omitted Paul's contributions from its pages, his rules are still enforced in boxing making him the only living composer and father of modern day boxing.

"We may not be able to read about him in history books but the effects from his bouts to get women boxing onto the card cannot be erased," Dr. Katarina Love, president of the International Women's Boxing Association. "Women should concede to Dr. Paul. He deserves to be recognized at the 2028 Olympics. If it was not for him, modern day women's boxing would be on the losing end. It's like air. We can't see it, but we need it to live. Rights in women's boxing are just as significant as women's right to vote. Now that we have it, we intend to keep it. We're knocking out anyone who stands in our way."

Dr. William Paul will be formally recognized on April 25 at noon during a special tribute in the Magnolia Room - Marietta, 2550 Sandy Plains Road #200 Marietta, Georgia 30066. The tribute will feature a viewing of a documentary on Paul, lunch, and an awards ceremony. For additional information, visit www.womensboxingassociation.com.

For more than 50 years, Pepsi has been part of football's defining moments. From world-class tournaments and stadium events like the UEFA Champions League and the Kick Off Show presented by Pepsi to community competitions, the brand has consistently been part of the moments that matter most to fans.

Football's influence extends far beyond 90 minutes on the pitch. It lives in the anticipation before kick-off, the traditions that build belief, the conversations that continue long after the final whistle, and the rituals woven into daily life. Pepsi brings all its football activity together under Pepsi Football Nation, guided by one ambition: Pepsi Celebrates How Football Feels Around the World.

Pepsi Football Nation celebrates fandom in all its expressions. It honors chants passed down through generations, pre-match rituals, debates that stretch late into the night, rivalries that test friendships, and the shared moments that bring Together, these initiatives create a connected ecosystem that mirrors how fans experience football every day. The excitement leading into a match, the emotional highs and lows during play, the memorable moments that become stories, and the conversations that keep the spirit of the game alive long after the final whistle. Eugene Willemssen, Chief Executive Officer, at PepsiCo, says: "For more than five decades, Pepsi has been at the heart of global football culture, bringing the game beyond the pitch and into the worlds of music, entertainment and fandom. As football grows and attract more diverse audiences, our opportunity is not only to show up in the sport, but to elevate the emotional energy that makes it unforgettable. Pepsi Football Nation is our next step: a platform that celebrates the passion, personality and shared experiences that unite fans everywhere.
